I am learning Laravel. My question is about the "user" data in the model. I know that $user = Auth::user(); and return $this->user(); are same. But are they not absolutely the same? If no, then what is the difference between this line and other lines in the model? Thank you very much! A: $user = Auth::user(); $this->user() returns an object, like $user = User::find(Auth::user()->id); $this->getUser() returns the fields of the user object, like $user = Auth::user(); $user->name $this->user() is the most appropriate in most cases when you need to access the user object without calling its methods. $this->getUser() is the best when you want to access the fields of the user object.
